Confronting a severe blockade on hydrocarbon supplies imposed by the al-Qaeda-affiliated Group for the Support of Islam and Muslims (JNIM), Mali has launched a comprehensive strategy combining military force, regional diplomacy, and internal resilience measures to safeguard its energy sovereignty. Mali is entering an acute national emergency as the country faces a historic energy crisis that now affects every region and every major sector. Fuel shortages, once confined to transport and trade, have expanded to education, healthcare, and electricity production, paralyzing daily life and. From ancient caravan routes to modern highways, life in Mali has long depended on the free movement of people and goods. Recently, however, attacks on oil trucks by al-Qaeda affiliate, Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal-Muslimin (JNIM), have brought life in many cities to a standstill. Mali has been struggling for over a decade to defeat “jihadists” around Gao, Kidal and Ségou. Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal-Muslimin (JNIM), linked to al-Qaida, is believed to be the most. Since late November 2025, the Malian capital Bamako has witnessed a gradual easing of the severe fuel crisis that paralysed the city for weeks, following an unprecedented blockade imposed by Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal-Muslimin (JNIM) on key roads leading into the capital.
